MANUEL AND ELINOR COHEN

We are very impressed with how Charleston Southern University teaches the next generation to become servant leaders. Their students are equipped with the soft skills needed in today's workforce. The alumni who give back to their alma mater are admirable. Although, we are not alumni we realize and appreciate what CSU does for our community.

With a degree from CSU, you have an opportunity to spend your life doing what you love to do. We challenge the graduates to remain optimistic, always try to serve others, and set goals for freedom, peace and justice. It is our pleasure to walk on the campus.

We appreciate what CSU does to repair the world.

DR. DONDI AND VICKEY COSTIN

Dr. Dondi and Vickey Costin joined the Charleston Southern family upon their retirement from the U.S. Air Force in the summer of 2018. A retired major general, Dr. Costin served as CSU's third president until becoming Liberty University's sixth president in the summer of 2023.

Born and raised in North Carolina, Dondi met Vickey at church during his first Air Force assignment in her Florida hometown. They have been married for more than 34 years. Vickey's career as a public school music educator spanned 23 years, during which she taught in six states while supporting Dondi's military career.

The Costins continue to invest in CSU because they see the University's lasting impact on future generations through the distinctively Christian education Charleston Southern provides. Because of their shared passion for the gospel, Dondi and Vickey have committed themselves to helping students from all stations in life have access to a life-changing CSU degree. They have seen firsthand that the benefits of supporting a Kingdom enterprise "preparing servant leaders to pursue significant lives" is more than worth the investment—in this life and the next.

MIKE HARMON

How much of your success postgraduation was due to your education at CSU? That is the question that I finally asked myself in 2014.

First, my high school grades were weak, and no four-year college I applied to in 1965 had any interest in me attending their school. Because of that, I went to a junior college and had my first awakening. I realized that I was smarter than my high school grades indicated I was and found that I had a natural ability to learn accounting. After two years in junior college, I was ready to pursue a four-year degree, but four-year colleges weren't interested in me.

Fortunately, someone told me about CSU, (Baptist College at the time) and they were willing to give me a try. Overall, I made very good grades at CSU and broadened my education and matured.

Upon graduation, I defied the odds again by going to work in accounting for the largest textile company in the world at that time and received many promotions and opportunities over the years. Those opportunities eventually led me to being Chief Financial Officer for two different billion-dollar public companies.

After choosing to leave corporate America in 2003, I went into consulting and helped lead efforts to save a struggling $4 million organic food company. Because they couldn't afford to pay me initially, I took stock in the company and sales over the next 10 years grew to over $100 million only to see the CEO of the company try to deprive me of the true value of the company's stock that I owned. This was particularly hard on me because the CEO would not make a major decision without my input for many years.

We went through a long legal process and ultimately reached a settlement in 2014 that led to my second awakening - How did I get from a kid that barely graduated high school to a successful business man.

The answer was the Christian upbringing that my mother instilled in me, and I know that I have had the success I have because of GOD leading me to CSU and the success I have enjoyed in the business world.

Now you know why I have been a Presidential Council member of the Board of Visitors since 2014.

HES FACILITY SERVICES

HES Facility Services has been delivering high-quality, cost-effective facility services throughout the country since 1974. Our focus is relatively narrow compared to many of our competitors in that we seek out partnerships only with educational institutions whose mission and values are aligned with ours. This approach has served us and our partners well for more than 45 years. HES's objective is to be the best college and university facility services (Maintenance, Custodial & Grounds) provider, not necessarily the biggest. We fulfill this objective by delivering quality service and building solid partnerships with every school. As a privately owned company, we can make decisions based on the long-term success of our partnerships and team members. We strive to provide consistent, high quality service. Our key to successfully delivering quality service is combining professional on-site leadership, strong and invested corporate support operating on a platform of proven systems and processes. This approach provides experienced leadership and an operating model to assure professional management.

We are proud to partner with Charleston Southern University in meeting their facility needs.

IOA

Since 2009, I've had the opportunity to handle Charleston Southern University's insurance and risk management program. While getting to know CSU, I learned that its vision is integrating faith in learning, leading, and serving.

Much like the university's vision, IOA also places a high value on faith in the marketplace. As president, I'm privileged to serve a company founded on three key elements—faith, family, and fun. We're very careful to make sure every team member knows that they are valued no matter what their beliefs are while at the same time demonstrating that faith is an important part of who we are and the values we represent. Like CSU, it's woven into the very fabric of our organization, and I have the opportunity every day to serve my clients and colleagues while integrating my faith into the marketplace. It's exciting and an honor to play a financial role in the future of CSU students as they learn and go forth to serve in their communities and businesses.

IOA is the fourth largest privately held insurance brokerage in the United States serving the insurance and risk management needs of its clients with more than 1,600 dedicated associates located in over 60 offices in the U.S. and United Kingdom. Rob can be reached at 803-260-3696.
